Supermarket Gallery is pleased to present Practitioners, the new series of photographs by Éva Szombat collected in book.

After researching and releasing a practical guide to Happiness I have decided to document actual people, who have introduced happiness into their lives to overcome misfortunes, tragedies, nuisances, or just the banality of day-to-day living.

Her new work extends Eva's interest about happiness and content life, as first explored in her Happiness series.

According to its citizens, Hungary is the most depressed country of them all, making finding happy people a hard task. In the past 3 years it was Eva's mission to find those, who feel they can live a happy life against all odds. Maybe they turn to hard work or unorthodox methods, they find the things that make them happy and practice them on a daily basis. Practitioners proves they exist. From the most banal, everyday things to life changing decisions, these people did something for a better life.

Éva Szombat (1987) is a photographer working in Budapest. Her unique blend of glamour and sociological examination has appeared in local and international magazines, and websites including, but not limited to, Vice, Huffington Post, Ignant and Feature Shoot. She got her masters' degree in Photography from MOME (2012). She won artistic scholarships in Paris and New York.
